"Hey, the doors are locked. Let's come out!" I shouted to my friends. They came out and grinned. "I wonder what will happen tonight?" asked George.

Suddenly, a screeching sound came from behind the door. "It seems kind of creepy here!" Jane wailed. I shrugged, and stood in front of the dummies. "What would happen? I should like to see the dummies dancing!" I laughed at my own joke.

A hand poked me on the back, and I looked behind. "The dummies are moving!" Jane screamed. We ran away, and bumped into a pile of toys. "Whew! That was close," George said, puffing. "Is not... help!" Jane screamed, too. Jane looked on the floor, and screamed. A toy tarantula was walking towards Jane. And, then, toy superman appeared. "I will save you, girl!" And he fought the tarantula when I was thinking, how could HE fight a tarantula bigger than him? And I was right. He was tore into pieces. Then, a car drove to my feet, and a cowboy came out. "Let's ^{screamed, and} war!" he yelled. Jane ran towards the art gallery. George ran with her. I glanced at the torn superman once more, and pulled Janet to the art gallery.

Jane was smiling at a picture. When she saw me, she said excitedly, "Look, John! Isn't it a beauty?" I looked at the picture and laughed. Can you guess what it is? No? I'll tell you. It's Mr. Bean riding a horse! Suddenly, the horse galloped out of the picture, and stamped on Jane's face! "Oh, my pretty face! Will ever anyone like me again?" she sobbed. Janet shouted, "Let's go!" and she ran to the last section: Books.

Jane and George took out the "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows" together. They snatched it. "It's mine!" cried Jane. "Is not!" shouted George. And they fought. A book hit George on the head. George turned around, and all the books came flying out three by three. Jane screamed as a book flew towards her. George rescued her, and had the book bump. "My hero!" she hugged George. Then, the lights turned on, and the night security guard came out. "Let's see if you would hide into the department store again!" and he threw a hamburger to the dummies.
